This book is the first to offer a global perspective on the unique contemporary media phenomenon of transnational television channels. It is also the first to compare their impact in different regions of the globe. Revealing great richness and diversity across some of the world's main geocultural regions (Europe, the Middle East, Africa, South Asia, Greater China and Latin America), international contributors with in-depth industry knowledge examine the place of these channels in the process of globalization, their impact on the nation-state and on regional culture and politics. The book also considers audiences and geocultural TV markets, providing new ways of thinking about the emerging transnational media order.

 Shanti Kumar's Gandhi Meets Primetime examines how cultural imaginings of national identity have been transformed by the rapid growth of satellite and cable television in postcolonial India. To evaluate the growing influence of foreign and domestic satellite and cable channels since 1991, the book considers a wide range of materials including contemporary television programming, historical archives, legal documents, policy statements, academic writings and journalistic accounts. Kumar argues that India's hybrid national identity is manifested in the discourses found in this variety of empirical sources. He deconstructs representations of Mahatma Gandhi as the Father of the Nation on the state-sponsored network Doordarshan and those found on Rupert Murdoch's STAR TV network. The book closely analyzes print advertisements to trace the changing status of the television set as a cultural commodity in postcolonial India and examines publicity brochures, promotional materials and programming schedules of Indian-language networks to outline the role of vernacular media in the discourse of electronic capitalism. The empirical evidence is illuminated by theoretical analyses that combine diverse approaches such as cultural studies, poststructuralism and postcolonial criticism. The Magic Behind the

El dossier monográfico de este número de Telos, dirigido por el catedrático de comunicación audiovisual, Hipólito Vivar (Universidad Complutense), se orienta hacia la demanda pero también hacia la formación de profesiones inéditas en el pasado, nacidas en la transformación profunda de la comunicación social y de sus relaciones con los usuarios. La profunda transformación de la tecnología ocasionada por el desarrollo de Internet implica profundos cambios en la cadena de valor de los diferentes sectores de la comunicación: no sólo se modifican los procesos productivos y cambian sus herramientas, sino que además aparecen otras formas de organización profesional y empresarial y nuevas funciones requeridas. Esta metamorfosis implica la demanda de muchos perfiles profesionales, tanto tradicionales de las Tecnologías de la Información y la Comunicación (TIC), como otros nuevos, surgidos fundamentalmente a partir de la introducción de forma masiva de las nuevas tecnologías digitales en todos los sectores industriales. Las empresas de la comunicación se han visto obligadas a la reestructuración de los sistemas de producción tradicionales de contenidos debido al desarrollo de las TIC y, posteriormente, con la irrupción de Internet y las redes sociales. La integración de estos elementos en la organización del proceso productivo ha impulsado precipitadamente a sus profesionales a adaptarse a las nuevas tareas asociadas a su puesto de trabajo. Asimismo, ha supuesto un desafío para la orientación de la formación de los estudiantes hacia el mercado laboral, el cual exige un nivel creciente de competencias digitales. This book is about the relationship between media and globalization, explored through the unique study of the global expansion of Discovery Communications, spearheaded by the Discovery Channel, one of the world's largest providers of factual television programming and media content. The book argues that the study of Discovery's relationship with globalization provides both a specific and a more general practical and theoretical understanding of how the processes of increased linking and interweaving of media and communications unfold and develop, as well as some of the consequences of this. The LEGO Animation Book Oxford University Press

Media and culture are deeply intertwined in contemporary society.

Religions have problems relating to this media culture, which is shaped by media processes and conditioned by digital media and interactive forms of communication. Media set the agenda and they profoundly challenge religions, both with respect to their public communication, and their very existence and public relevance. People increasingly use media for shaping their religious identity and their search with respect to questions of ultimate meaning. Barely any theological studies exist that reflect on religious policies, and their subsequent praxis, in the field of communication. The author analyzes Christian policy views and identifies the main problems and opportunities in relating to media culture.
