An Analysis of Diagnostic Tests and Remedial Procedures in Elementary English Textbooks Addison Wesley Publishing Company

As the United States continues to be a nation of immigrants and their children, the nation's school systems face increased enrollments of students whose primary language is not English. With the 2001 reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) in the No Child Left Behind Act (NCLB), the allocation of federal funds for programs to assist these students to be proficient in English became formula-based: 80 percent on the basis of the population of children with limited English proficiency1 and 20 percent on the basis of the population of recently immigrated children and youth. Title III of NCLB directs the U.S. Department of Education to allocate funds on the basis of the more accurate of two allowable data sources: the number of students reported to the federal government by each state education agency or data from the American Community Survey (ACS). The department determined that the ACS estimates are more accurate, and since 2005, those data have been basis for the federal distribution of Title III funds. Subsequently, analyses of the two data sources have raised concerns about that decision, especially because the two allowable data sources would allocate quite different amounts to the states. In addition, while shortcomings were noted in the data provided by the states, the ACS estimates were shown to fluctuate between years, causing concern among the states about the unpredictability and unevenness of program funding. In this context, the U.S. Department of Education commissioned the National Research Council to address the accuracy of the estimates from the two data sources and the factors that influence the estimates. The resulting book also considers means of increasing the accuracy of the data sources or alternative data sources that could be used for allocation purposes.

This manual helps prepare fifth graders to take the three-part ELA test required throughout New York State. The book presents practice exercises and review sections for all of the test's three question types: multiple choice questions, short response questions, and an editing question. The test's first part, reading comprehension, consists of multiple choice and short response answers. The second part, in which students listen to a passage read to them, also requires multiple-choice and short response answers. The final section requires students to make editing corrections to a short reading passage. This book also presents two complete practice tests with answers and explanations.
