Diary of a Wimpy Kid Hay House, Inc

How the rabbis of late antiquity used time to define the boundaries of Jewish identity The rabbinic corpus begins with a question—"when?"—and is brimming with discussions about time and the relationship between people, God, and the hour. Time and Difference in Rabbinic Judaism explores the rhythms of time that animated the rabbinic world of late antiquity, revealing how rabbis conceptualized time as a way of constructing difference between themselves and imperial Rome, Jews and Christians, men and women, and human and divine. In each chapter, Sarit Kattan Gribetz explores a unique aspect of rabbinic discourse on time. She shows how the ancient rabbinic texts artfully subvert Roman imperialism by offering "rabbinic time" as an alternative to "Roman time." She examines rabbinic discourse about the Sabbath, demonstrating how the weekly day of rest marked "Jewish time" from "Christian time." Gribetz looks at gendered daily rituals, showing how rabbis created "men's time" and "women's time" by mandating certain rituals for men and others for women. She delves into rabbinic writings that reflect on how God spends time and how God's use of time relates to human beings, merging "divine time" with "human time." Finally, she traces the legacies of rabbinic constructions of time in the medieval and modern periods. Time and Difference in Rabbinic Judaism sheds new light on the central role that time played in the construction of Jewish identity, subjectivity, and theology during this transformative period in the history of Judaism.

Für jeden einzelnen Tag von 2001 - 2020 findet man hier die entsprechenden Daten der verschiedenen Maya-Kalender: Haab, Tzolkin und Long Count. Laut dem Maya-Kalender endet einen Tag vor dem 21./23. Dezember 2012 die 13. Baktun-Epoche. Dieses Datum ist vergleichbar einem Jahrtausendwechsel bei uns, oder genauer gesagt dem Ende einer ca. 5125 Jahre lange Epoche von 13. Baktuns. Dies bedeutet aber keinesfalls einen Weltuntergang, denn an diesem Tag beginnt die 14. Baktun-Epoche - das Leben geht weiter.

Years before the widespread use of email and the World Wide Web, Congress directed in the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970 that the U.S. Postal Service "shall have as its basic function the obligation to provide postal services to bind the Nation together through the personal, educational, literary, and business correspondence of the people." Half a century after that congressional declaration of the "basic function" of the Postal Service, the COVID-19 pandemic gripped the American economy and dramatically stimulated demand for and reliance on e-commerce package deliveries from businesses to homes. Substantial evidence indicates that in 2020 the business of the Postal Service fundamentally and permanently changed. And as a result of that change, the congressionally declared "obligation" of the Postal Service to provide "as its basic function" the provision of services that would "bind the Nation together through the . . .

correspondence of the people" is now threatened by two separate factors. The first is the collapse of demand for mailed correspondence because of technological innovation and changing consumer tastes: the "correspondence of the people" continues its steady migration from letters to electronic means, a trend which of course began long before the COVID-19 pandemic. The second factor is the demand (by both businesses and households) for the Postal Service's expanding (but inessential) role as a public enterprise providing e-commerce package delivery. In the aftermath of the COVID-19 pandemic, policymakers must confront existential questions concerning the Postal Service. Not all the answers to those questions are yet known. Not all the pertinent questions are even known. In 2020, the Postal Service no longer faithfully adheres to the statutory mandate--that its "basic function" be the delivery of the "correspondence of the people." Following the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic in the United States in 2020, the Postal Service's transformation into a public enterprise primarily providing e-commerce package delivery abruptly accelerated. In 2020, after the onset of COVID-19, the level of demand for e-commerce package delivery that formerly was considered "peak load" became the new--and perhaps permanent--"base load." The new base load resembles the Christmas peak load consistently observed in the last two months of every calendar year. During the sustained peak load after the onset of COVID-19, substantial evidence indicates that package delivery might remain incrementally unprofitable to the Postal Service. The Postal Service's outmoded accounting principles date to the 1970s and obscure precisely how incrementally profitable or unprofitable package delivery really is as an economic matter. The Postal Service has not reliably shown with substantial evidence that the incremental revenues derived from package delivery cover the incremental costs that the Postal Service has attributed to its delivery of packages. Policymakers should seriously confront the prospect that the Postal Service does not even seek to turn an economic profit from its package-delivery enterprise. The Postal Service has not produced substantial evidence that its package-delivery enterprise is profitable as an economic matter. Yet, the Postal Service plans to invest billions of dollars in infrastructure to deliver e-commerce packages. Who will pay for that investment? The optimal level of investment by the Postal Service is likely negative. In other words, policymakers should seriously consider whether the Postal Service should disinvest from its existing package-delivery enterprise. Members of Congress must decide what kind of business the Postal Service should operate before they appropriate billions of dollars for a business model that is unsustainable in the long run. The corporate assets that the Congress would be wasting would belong to taxpayers. The solution is to design a Postal Service optimized to serve its statutory mandate.

Greg Piper 2020 Calendar Walter de Gruyter GmbH & Co KG

The director of the famed Bodleian Libraries at Oxford narrates the global history of the willful destruction—and surprising survival—of recorded knowledge over the past three millennia. Libraries and archives have been attacked since ancient times but have been especially threatened in the modern era. Today the knowledge they safeguard faces purposeful destruction and willful neglect; deprived of funding, libraries are fighting for their very existence. Burning the Books recounts the history that brought us to this point. Richard Ovenden describes the deliberate destruction of knowledge held in libraries and archives from ancient Alexandria to contemporary Sarajevo, from smashed Assyrian tablets in Iraq to the destroyed immigration documents of the UK Windrush generation. He examines both the motivations for these acts—political, religious, and cultural—and the broader themes that shape this history. He also looks at attempts to prevent and mitigate attacks on knowledge, exploring the efforts of librarians and archivists to preserve information, often risking their own lives in the process. More than simply repositories for knowledge, libraries and archives inspire and inform citizens. In preserving notions of statehood recorded in such historical documents as the Declaration of Independence, libraries support the state itself. By preserving records of citizenship and records of the rights of citizens as enshrined in legal documents such as the Magna Carta and the decisions of the US Supreme Court, they support the rule of law. In Burning the Books, Ovenden takes a polemical stance on the social and political importance of the conservation and protection of knowledge, challenging governments in particular, but also society as a whole, to improve public policy and funding for these essential institutions.

In this compelling exploration of life, Gregg Braden merges the modern discoveries of nature’s patterns (fractals) with the ancient view of a cyclic universe. The result is a powerful model of time—fractal time—and a realistic window into what we can expect for the mysterious year 2012 . . . and beyond. Applying fractal time to the history of the world and life, he proposes that everything from the war and peace between nations to the patterns of human relationships mirror the returning cycles of our past. As each cycle repeats, it carries a more powerful, amplified version of itself. The key: If you know where to look in the past, you know what to expect when the same conditions return in the present and future. For the first time in print, the Time Code Calculator gives you the tool to do just that! Through easy-to-understand science and step-by-step instructions, discover for yourself:

- How the conditions for 2012 have occurred in the past, and what we can expect when they repeat!
- The “hot dates” that hold the greatest threats of war and greatest opportunities for peace, as well as economic cycles such as the stockmarket collapse of 2008!
- How Earth’s location in space triggers cycles of spiritual growth for humans!
- Your personal Time Codes for the key events of business, relationships, and change in your life!
- How each cycle carries a window of opportunity—a choice point—that allows us to select a new outcome for the returning pattern!
- What the 1999 ice cores from Antarctica reveal about past cycles of climate, global warming, Earth’s protective magnetic fields, and what these things mean for us today!
