Apart from the procedural information that describes how a device should be operated, instructions for use include different types of declarative information, such as information about the internal working of the device (system information) and information about the circumstances in which the different functions can be used (utilization information). In this study, the use and the effects of system and utilization information are investigated in a number of experiments. The results demonstrate that users spend a considerable amount of time on reading each information type. However, contrary to common belief, system information has only limited effects; utilization information does not affect task performance at all. Moreover, users of instructions without declarative information are more confident in their ability to learn to work with the device and consider the learning process less difficult than users of instructions with declarative information. These results suggest that users of instructions without system and utilization information are capable to use other information sources such as the procedural information and the interface of the device to derive the required declarative knowledge.

Excerpt from Concrete Inspection: A Manual of Information and Instructions for Inspectors of Concrete Work With Standard and Typical Specifications Careful inspection is a vital factor in securing safe and enduring concrete work. No matter how well the engineer may design, his work will come to naught unless his design is accurately carried out by careful and skillful workmanship with good materials. The construction must be good and assurance of good construction is had in conscientious and competent inspection alone. The duties of concrete inspection are various and numerous. It is the purpose of this volume to give a schedule of these duties and such general and specific instructions as are necessary to insure their performance. The book consists of a series of rules and directions to be followed in inspecting concrete work with brief explanations of the reasons for each rule and of their importance. It is believed that everything said is based on sound practice and acknowledged authority, and that the young inspector will not be led astray, even if the old experienced inspector is taught nothing that he does not already know. The European Union has highlighted the issue of environmentally sound use of products in the context of Integrated Product Policy, IPP. Accordingly, consumers should have easy access to understandable, relevant and credible environmental information. Information about product characteristics is available in different forms and sources, but in many cases, relevant environmental information is not available on the product itself. The study described in this report was initiated in order to produce information on the state of user instructions regarding environmental information. User manuals of passenger cars and refrigerators were focused on, examining the advice which could diminish the harmful environmental effects of the use of these products. Other studied products included such durable products as textiles and furniture as well as such consumables as cleaning chemicals and recyclable paper products. The study raised many ideas about actions that could promote the status and 'eco-development' of instructions for use.
