The Copper Scroll is a fast paced adventure

novel, a veritable treasure hunt for ancient gold. Using an authentic document
from the group known as the Dead Sea Scrolls, an Israeli and an Irishman must first liberate' it from the Jordanians. Then they use it as a map to find some of the hordes of gold and silver buried around the country in the days of the Roman Empire and the Second Temple. The story has plenty of romance and danger too. Spud' Murphy falls in love with an Israeli girl. And there's action aplenty as our heroes run from the Arab Legion and have a shootout in the end with those who don't like what they're about. There's a character in the story to suit every taste. There's a mad monk, a Jewish gangster and his mob, a couple of college professors (one good, one not so good), a black Arab mayor, an idealistic protagonist and a cynical protagonist, and a host of interesting minor personalities. From New York City to Jerusalem to Amman, one adventure follows hard after another. Each chapter will intrigue the reader with mystery and suspense. The reader will never know, from chapter to chapter, what's going to happen next. This book is guaranteed to keep him and her engrossed and they'll find it hard to put down.

The Great Lakes region of Africa was believed to be the cradle of humanity but it turned out to be the hell in spite of its paradise inspiring landscape. War has become almost endemic in the region where the poet grew up. Chaos in all aspects of life ranging from violence, corruption, disease, children and women abuse, prostitution, looting, vandalism of all kinds prevail overtaking the harmony which had reigned for ages. As a peacemaker, Claver Nkurunziza is at war against war. Though the situation is daunting, the poet still believes and makes the reader believe that harmony may be recovered through love, virtue and faith. The Best Kind of Loving CreateSpace

Finally, here is a book that celebrates the unique beauty of black love. From the author Relationships between black men and women in America are in crisis—it's time to figure out what's gone wrong and start the healing process. The current divorce rates for black couples have quadrupled since 1960 and is now double that of the general population; rates of domestic violence in black marriages are skyrocketing; and nearly half of married black men admit to having been unfaithful. In What's Love Got to Do with It? Donna Franklin, one of the country's leading African American sociologists, speaks out on these painful, complex issues, providing an incisive and riveting analysis of the gender tensions that are the legacy of slavery and its aftermath. Franklin breaks new ground in explaining why black men and women have trouble relating to each other, and examines their profoundly different starting points, which are influenced by generations of racism and injustice. She shows how black women's strength and self-sufficiency can be used to nurture relationships. Likewise, she teaches black men how to support one another and their relationships with women without excluding women, as has happened with the Million Man March. The challenge of mending the rift between black men and women is formidable but can be made easier.

Understanding is the first step on the path to healing.

change in their communities through radical civic initiatives and movements. She argues that the US educational system is maintained by and profits from the suffering of children of color. Instead of trying to repair a flawed system, educational reformers offer survival tactics in the forms of test-taking skills, acronyms, grit labs, and character education, which Love calls the educational survival complex. To dismantle the educational survival complex and to achieve educational freedom—not merely reform—teachers, parents, and community leaders must approach education with the imagination, determination, boldness, and urgency of an abolitionist. Following in the tradition of activists like Ella Baker, Bayard Rustin, and Fannie Lou Hamer, We Want to Do More Than Survive introduces an alternative to traditional modes of educational reform and expands our ideas of civic engagement and intersectional justice. Tired of hearing (and believing) the lies that the media and your own sister friends keep feeding you: that good black love is an impossibility, that all the best men are either married, gay, or sell out on their own kind? If so, it's time to get stripped. Welcome to the best and most practical relationship advice you'll ever receive. . . . Host of "The Love Zone," Baltimore's #1 urban radio relationship show, LaDawn Black has made it her mission to enlighten her African American sisters on finding and keeping quality black men. Stripped Bare is the blueprint of that mission: a relationship guide that, unlike any other, asks you—a smart, modern woman—to take inventory of your own life in order to land the man of your dreams. Leave the blame and the baggage behind. This take-charge manifesto shows you how to be the kind of person who'll attract the men that you deserve. With these twelve proven truths that LaDawn and her own friends have put to the test, you'll challenge self-defeating ways of thinking and living and position yourself for enduring love. From letting go of the past and gaining a sense of fun to living for you and breaking the girlfriend chain (those negative friends who keep you and your expectations low), Stripped Bare lays out the tools you'll need—and the directions for how to use them to your greatest romantic advantage. Filled with personal anecdotes that illustrate each truth, this wise, amusing, and candid guide will help you break the cycle of dead-end relationships (hint: it's a whole lot easier than you realized) and embrace that sexy, loving guy who's always been within your reach.

The Black Female Crisis and the Politics of Love in Black America is a succinct but workmanlike treatment of the key issues that challenge African American women, and the black community as a whole. The author begins with candid introspection, offering a glimpse into his own experiences, and a picture of the social dynamics that inform the politics of love in black America. He then delves into matters of consequence to African American women, such as the impact of media images, education, and the male perspective. He forcefully challenges the status quo by demanding accountability from black women, while simultaneously exposing those negative characteristics of black culture for which black men are culpable. Hemphill ends with a positive and constructive solution to the black female crisis which calls for the consolidation of African American spiritual and intellectual potential.

Student retention, engagement, and success are some of the biggest challenges that administrators and university leaders face in higher education settings. As financial support and steep competition pose an issue to student acquisition and participation, especially within Historically Black Colleges and Universities, it becomes pertinent that these academic organizations implement new leadership practices to assist in the overall success of the student, as well as the institution. Administrative

Challenges and Organizational Leadership in Historically Black Colleges and Universities examines how administrations in Historically Black Educational Institutions utilize different leadership techniques to overcome challenges of student retention and engagement. Focusing on student development practices, organizational collaboration, funding for institutions, and support provided from faculty and staff within Historically Black Colleges and Universities, this book is an essential reference for university administrators, educators, researchers, and graduate-level students in the fields of education and sociology.

Decades ago, when relationships developed between men and women, most often their associations were based upon mutual admiration, respect, similar interests and racial connection. As time passed and the elements of love, devotion, honor, trust and support became an integral part of those relationships, men and women proudly and sacredly vowed to lifetime commitments, and began building strong, loving family units that evolved from one generation to the next. Yet today, as persistent societal changes threaten, challenge and test family values, more men and women are finding that the cohesive foundations that held their family trees together, years ago, are now lying in shambles like fallen houses of cards. Sadly enough, for many men and women, family values have become insignificant, meaningless and to some, even a joke. As cheating, indiscriminate sex and one-night stands become the 'games' on any given day, and men and women fall in and out of love like adolescents going through stages of puppy love, it's no wonder relationships are receiving such a blistering black eye. And then, of course, by the time you throw in such elements as couples' low and degrading public displays, demeaning and dirt-slinging criticisms, or the all too common neglect and disregard of innocent children derived from tarnished and broken relationships, you have an up close and personal look at just a small sector of the underlying causes for the negative ways many men and women view and treat one another. And, to their detriment, it is not a pretty picture. To understand many of the various reasons why so many 'black' men and women tend to be at tremendous odds with one another in their relationships, one merely needs to read "black men vs. White Men... the Black Woman's Choice," by authors Cicely J and Marlon Green. It is a viewpoint from both sides of the coin that needs to be examined. "black men vs. White Men... the Black Woman's Choice," a no-holds barred reading, is certain to create a firestorm of controversy for its critical and razor-sharp assessment of the unraveling of Black America. This book is a "must-read" that will, undoubtedly, anger those who just might happen to see their own reflections in the authors' mirror that also exposes the issues that continue to broaden the gap between black men and women.

Sweet Love IGI Global Dear Black Love is about rekindling love within the African American Home. In order to do that we need to have healthy relationships and marriages that will continue to thrive for generations to come! As a single black woman that's been in the dating game for many years after divorce. I've had my share of frustrations throughout this process, however I've learned so many life changing things along the way. I was troubled by seeing so many single black women who weren't married but desired to be. I wondered why we were being overlooked? Why does it seem like marriage is the last thing on a black man's bucket list and why is it that black men are marrying outside of their race too often? I decided to take a journey into the minds of black men and women from different parts of the world to discover challenges they've experienced within their relationships. In this book you'll find many different opinions and perspectives that you may or may not agree with, but hopefully it will cause you to reflect and give you a new perspective overall. The goal is to start the CONVERSATION so we can get to the root of the problem that we see within the black family! Black Love is about to make a beautiful come back and an even greater impact! Love is waiting for you and its not as hard or as difficult as we think. Take this journey with me and explore the possibilities of dating, love and marriage!

Mi Love Yuh Like a Fresh Vegetable Simon and Schuster

While a great deal of sociological and psychological research has been done on black-white interracial couples and the challenges they have faced in past eras, the communication between the partners remains largely under-explored and under-theorized. The purpose of this dissertation is two-fold. First, this dissertation seeks to understand what challenges interracial couples face today. Second, this dissertation also explores the communication surrounding these challenges, communication both within the couple and communication between the couple and their social networks. To explore these challenges and the resulting communication, 14 black-white interracial couples were interviewed in depth. Results showed that interracial couples often still face messages of disapproval from their families. Black families and white families sometimes disapproved for similar reasons; however, black families and white families had several concerns that were markedly different from each other and were tied to the history of race relations in the US. Further, results showed that partners in interracial relationship underwent identity transformations as they learned to navigate an intimate relationship with a "racial other." Whites reported learning the most. Because of their privileged position in society, whites life situations had never had necessitated that they learn about the black co-culture. The black partners also reported seeing the white community differently by understanding the nuances of racism at a deeper level because of their "outsider within" position in white families. Finally, results suggested that couples grapple with balancing the dialectic between embracing race in the relationship and rejecting race in the relationship. Couples reject race, arguing that other differences are more important to their relationship. Couples embrace race when they talk about issues of identity such as their individual identities, their identity as a couple, and--when they had children-- their identity as a family. Further analysis demonstrate two different strategies couples use to manage the embracing race-rejecting race dialectic.
