The Rough Guide to Los Angeles & Southern California Apa Publications (UK) Limited

Excerpt from Standard Guide to Los Angeles, San Diego and the Panama-California Exposition, Vol. 1 America's playground is this year established in Southern California with its capital at San Diego, where the Panama-California International Exposition is being held after a year's successful operation of the Panama-California Exposition. Encouraged by the success attending the 1915 exposition, plans for the 1916 international fair were made before the one of 1915 passed out of existence, and thus San Diego, as no other city in the world had ever done, boasts of a two-year exposition. This is a record achievement for a municipality and contributes a new era in exposition history. Now in all of its glory and splendor, the Panama-California International Exposition is a going concern, pulsating with life and teeming with attractions. Augmented by the principal foreign exhibits from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco, which was closed December 4, 1915, the display at San Diego invites world attention. The man at the head of this project, G. A. Davidson, who piloted the Exposition through a year's satisfactory operation, sees in this year the climax of exposition endeavor. "Make the Exposition contribute a higher type of internationalism" is President Davidson's slogan. In the transportation of visitors to the Exposition the railroads must now reckon with a formidable rival. This is the automobile, and the popularity and feasibility of transcontinental touring to the Exposition is evidenced each day in the arrival of cars from many States east of the Mississippi. A striking example of the automobile's importance in the transportation of Exposition visitors is seen daily in Southern California, where magnificent concrete highways bear the tread of motor's wheels. Situated only 140 miles from Los Angeles, the drive to the Exposition over the State Highway of concrete is one of pleasure. Skirting the azure blue of the Pacific, which rolls its waters up in play on sandy beaches, this highway follows the coast line for much of its route, taps a fertile country and unfolds scenic wonders to the motorist.
