Bachelor Thesis from the year 2014 in the subject Economics - Finance, University of Rwanda, language: English, abstract: Financial institution development in Rwanda is one of the approaches that the government has focused its attention in recent years in pursuit of its long term vision of providing sustainable financial services to majority of Rwandan population for investment. The study was therefore set to examine the contribution of financial institutions in promoting private investments in Rwanda. The study objectives were: To examine the strategies used by KCB in promoting private investments in Rwanda, examine the financial services KCB extends to private investors in Rwanda and the challenges Investors faces in accessing credit from KCB. To achieve the set objectives, the study collected Primary data from 2 business promotion senior managers, 6 employees and 91 customers from KCB. The study adopted descriptive and statistical approaches in processing data and Special Program for Social Studies (SPSS) computer program was employed in data analysis. The study findings found out the strategies used by KCB in promoting private investments in Rwanda and included among others; savings mobilization, provision of cheap medium of exchange, remittance of funds, provision of agency services and collection of statistics. The study also identified the financial services KCB extends to private investors in Rwanda which included; overdraft facilities, cash credit, discounting bills of exchange, term loan and letter of credit and traveler's cheques. However, the study identified challenges faced by private investors in accessing credit from KCB and among those was high interest rate, lack of information, lack of collateral/ security, bureaucratic processes and short repayment period. Therefore the study draws a conclusion that KCB should exert efforts to remedy such drawbacks in order to have effective services to the customers. The study recommended among others lowering of interest rate, and introducing variety of repayment modes.

In today's competitive banking industry, institutional banking is attracting greater interest. Under the globalization umbrella, inter-bank business is undergoing dynamic change and is transcending the boundaries of traditional correspondent banking. In today's climate, no bank, regardless of size, can grow without the cooperation of other banks and no bank can hope to survive and prosper without utilizing emerging markets. Institutional banking in emerging countries has some unique functions: for example, problem solving is heavier and more crucial in emerging markets than in developed countries, given the irregularity of the market and non-transparency of the financial/legal systems. Moreover, it is particularly necessary to forge good relationships, day-to-day contact and personal communication, to provide better chances for product marketing and risk management. Products are therefore tailor-made and adapted as the situation dictates, a successful lesson for one case in one country cannot necessarily be repeated in another. Huang provides a systematic framework for the subject combining both principles and practice. The direct experience of the author, allows him to write authoritatively about the subject with academic vigour as well as a large amount of practical knowledge which only a practitioner can provide. The book contains numerous real life examples and case studies to allow the reader an insight into how Institutional Banking actually works in the real world. The book also contains a supplementary CD which includes chapter summary's and further information. Note: CD-ROM/DVD and other supplementary materials are not included as part of eBook file.

Excerpt from Bookkeeping Banking A Bank, in its simplest form, is an institution for the safe-keeping of money; but the commercial bank of to-day is designed to render the public many varied and important services. The general utility of commercial banks may be stated as follows: 1. They provide a place for the safe-keeping of money and securities. 2. They afford a business man an opportunity to borrow money to carry on his enterprises while his capital is locked up in merchandise or in the hands of his debtors. The credit of many mercantile houses is worth as much to them as the capital they possess. 3. They save the transmission of money from one place to another, thus avoiding great risks and keeping money in more active circulation. Settlements are effected by issuing to customers (a) bankers' drafts; (b) bills of exchange; (c) letters of credit. 4. They facilitate the payment of bills by permitting money deposited to be withdrawn upon a simple order called a check. This check when issued serves the business man in various ways, as follows: a. It saves time in paying large sums of money. b. It obviates the risk that attends the handling of money. c. It constitutes a record of expenditures and furnishes the business man convenient data from which to make entries in his books. d. When the check is canceled it serves the purpose of a receipt. Fully 90% of bank bookkeeping grows out of the use and collection of checks and other negotiable instruments. 5. By issuing letters of credit they afford people who travel a means of securing money in distant places without risk. 6. They afford excellent facilities for the collection of negotiable paper, - bills, notes, bonds, coupons, etc. 7. They are often a source of useful business information pertaining to investments and other matters. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
