What makes for a great meeting? As a leader, how can you keep discussions on point and productive? In How to Run a Meeting, Antony Jay argues that too many leaders fail to plan adequately for meetings. In this bestselling article, he defines the characteristics that contribute to success, from keeping formal minutes to acknowledging junior staff first. These guidelines will help you get demonstrably better results from every meeting you run. Since 1922, Harvard Business Review has been a leading source of breakthrough ideas in management practice. The Harvard Business Review Classics series now offers you the opportunity to make these seminal pieces a part of your permanent management library. Each highly readable volume contains a groundbreaking idea that continues to shape best practices and inspire countless managers around the world.

Journal of the Western Society of Engineers

This study aims at identifying the attitude formation for consensus building using an actual barrier-free road construction project in a local urban area. First, questionnaires were distributed to the local residents who attended the residents committee meetings concerning the project.

Questionnaires were distributed before the first meeting and at the end of subsequent meetings, and collected after the meetings. One-way analysis of variance for within-subject design and path analysis were applied to the data. As a result, it was found that 1) fair meetings significantly increased public trust in administrative authorities and the rating of procedural justice, 2) whether the locals would agree to the project or not before the meeting was strongly depended on their trust in administrative authorities and 3) after getting project information in the meeting, the committee determined whether or not to accept the project based on the validity of the project. The shift of factors of attitude formation as shown in the third finding has not yet been reported, so it is of high academic value.
