The monograph series Oxford Studies in Medieval Literature and Culture showcases the plurilingual and multicultural quality of medieval literature and actively seeks to promote research that not only focuses on the array of subjects medievalists now pursue - in literature, theology, and philosophy, in social, political, jurisprudential, and intellectual history, the history of art, and the history of science - but also that combines these subjects productively. It offers innovative studies on topics that may include, but are not limited to, manuscript and book history; languages and literatures of the global Middle Ages; race and the post-colonial; the digital humanities, media and performance; music; medicine; the history of affect and the emotions; the literature and practices of devotion; the theory and history of gender and sexuality, ecocriticism and the environment; theories of aesthetics; medievalism. The Arts of Disruption: Allegory and Piers Plowman offers a series of new readings of the allegorical poem Piers Plowman: but it is also a book about allegory. It argues not just that there are distinctively disruptive 'arts' that occur in allegory, but that allegory, because it is interested in the difficulty of making meaning, is itself a disruptive art. The book approaches this topic via the study of five medieval allegorical narrative structures that exploit diegetic conflict and disruption. Although very different, they all bring together contrasting descriptions of spiritual process, in order to develop new understanding and excite moral or devotional change. These five structures are: the paradiastolic 'hypocritical figure' (such as vices masked by being made to look like 'adjacent' virtues), personification debate, violent language and gestures of apophasis, narratives of bodily decline, and grail romance. Each appears in a range of texts, which the book explores, along with other connected materials in medieval rhetoric, logic, grammar, spiritual thought, ethics, medicine, and romance iconography. These allegorical narrative structures appear radically transformed in Piers Plowman, where the poem makes further meaning out of the friction between them. Much of the allegorical work of the poem occurs at the points of their intersection, and within the conceptual gaps that open up between them. Ranging across a wide variety of medieval allegorical texts, the book shows from many perspectives allegory's juxtaposition of the heterogeneous and its questioning of supposed continuities.

Differentiating Instruction With Menus: Middle School Edition offers teachers everything they need to create a student-centered learning environment based on choice. Addressing the four main subject areas (language arts, math, science, and social studies) and the major concepts taught within these areas, these books provide a number of different types of menus that middle school students can use to select exciting products that they will develop so that teachers can assess what has been learned-versus using a traditional worksheet format. Each book contains attractive reproducible menus, each based on the levels of Bloom's Revised taxonomy, for students to use to guide themselves in making decisions as to which products they will develop after studying a major concept or unit. Using creative and challenging choices found in Tic-Tac-Toe Menus, List Menus, 2-5-8 Menus, Baseball Menus, and Game Show Menus, students will look forward to sharing their newfound knowledge throughout the year. Also included are specific guidelines for products, rubrics for assessing student products, and teacher introduction pages for each menu.

Hale, Margaret A. "Middle School Language Arts Teachers as Readers." Unpublished Doctor of Education Dissertation, University of Houston, December, 2011. Abstract: In today's fast-paced world, it is important that adolescents develop a reading habit. This need to encourage adolescent readers to develop reading habits is underscored by the results of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's (OECD) 2009 Program for International Student Assessment (PISA). In its Executive Summary, the OECD emphasized the need for qualified teachers in all schools. The need for qualified teachers is mirrored in the United States' federal standards for teachers and standards outlined by various English/language arts professional organizations. The purpose of this study was to describe the reading attitudes, habits, and behaviors of middle school language arts teachers. This study adds to existing research that describes the reading habits, behaviors, and attitudes of in-service teachers by focusing specifically on teachers of middle school language arts. The researcher describes the reading habits, behaviors and attitudes of those teachers to demonstrate whether or not the population of teachers meets the criteria published by professional organizations for what characterizes an accomplished teacher of language arts. In addition, the researcher describes relationships between the reading habits, attitudes and behaviors of middle school language arts teachers and level of education, route to teacher certification, and years of experience. The participants for this study were drawn from the population of middle school language arts teachers in a suburban school district outside Houston, Texas. The participants completed a researcher-developed survey of 17 items covering two components. The data were analyzed to determine mean scores for each of the two components. Further analysis was conducted using a multivariate analysis of variance (MANOVA) to determine any relationships between the independent and dependent variables. Results of the study indicated that while a large number of the respondents from all categories indicated they enjoy reading and read often, few of the respondents read professionally from the selected journals. The MANOVA indicated that education level is a significant predictor of the professional journal reading habits of teachers but neither route to certification nor years of experience significantly predict reading motivations and attitudes or professional journal reading habits..

The nearly two hundred activities in this teaching guide for language arts in the junior high and middle school are arranged in five sections: studying language, communicating orally, reading and reading literature, writing, and listening and viewing. Each section opens with a list of activities, a brief introductory statement, and suggested reading. Sections are subdivided to help teachers locate activities related to particular curriculum units or areas of special interest. All activities were adapted to fit a unified format: purpose, preparation, and presentation. Approximately half of the activities contain material that should be distributed to students and these material sheets are printed separately for ease of reproduction and are presented in a special section. The appendix contains articles on parental involvement in the language arts program and on a two-year program in junior high school writing. (MKM)
