Randol Contreras came of age in the South Bronx during the 1980s, a time when the community was devastated by cuts in social services, a rise in arson and abandonment, and the rise of crack-cocaine. For this riveting book, he returns to the South Bronx with a sociological eye and provides an unprecedented insider's look at the workings of a group of Dominican drug robbers. Known on the streets as "Stickup Kids," these men raided and brutally tortured drug dealers storing large amounts of heroin, cocaine, marijuana, and cash. As a participant observer, Randol Contreras offers both a personal and theoretical account for the rise of the Stickup Kids and their violence. He mainly focuses on the lives of neighborhood friends, who went from being crack dealers to drug robbers once their lucrative crack market opportunities disappeared. The result is a stunning, vivid, on-the-ground ethnographic description of a drug robbery's violence, the drug market high life, the criminal life course, and the eventual pain and suffering experienced by the casualties of the Crack Era.

Provocative and eye-opening, The Stickup Kids urges us to explore the ravages of the drug trade through weaving history, biography, social structure, and drug market forces. It offers a revelatory explanation for drug market violence by masterfully uncovering the hidden social forces that produce violent and self-destructive individuals. Part memoir, part penetrating analysis, this book is engaging, personal, deeply informed, and entirely absorbing.

Take a walk with one of the most relentless drug kingpins to ever promenade the streets of New York: Ahmed Yung. His father was an old-school gangster and his mother passed away after giving birth, leaving Ahmed to fend for himself. Witnessing his father's death at the early age of 12, Ahmed made a commitment to become one of the most respected hustlers on earth. Upon his release from six years of incarceration, Ahmed, 23, is forced to deal with the pressure. His comrades have the game on smash and they're just waiting for his return to the streets. Christal and Malique, his girlfriend and son, depend on him to adjust his lifestyle. The choices he contemplates ultimately determine his destiny. This is the story of almost every hustler who decides to play the game. Mistakes are made, hearts are broken and lives are lost. But one thing is for sure: decisions will have to be made. Strap up for a ride down a path of pain and glory. This is 'A Drug Dealer's Dream.'

At the age of 58, crime reporter Steven Wright takes the sudden step of accepting redundancy from his job in Bradford. The horse lover leaves behind murders, shootings and drug dealers and opens the door to a long-held dream - to ride his ex-steeplechaser in a race! It had been a fairytale for Steven to become the proud owner of chestnut thoroughbred Adelphi Warrior, known as Alexander, after turning to horse riding in middle age as therapy for bankruptcy, a broken marriage and a drink problem. His longing to ride his beloved ex-racehorse on the track comes true when he finds himself out of a job and with time on his hands. But is the race a disastrous idea for a man whose gung-ho antics had labelled him the Mr Bean of local equestrianism? Race To My Dream tells how, against all odds, and at the combined age of 71, Steven and Alexander take on their greatest challenge. The book takes you with them as they prepare for their big day. And it plonks you in the saddle with Steven for the race itself. It recalls the seven years that preceded it; the dramatic falls, the uplifting triumphs, the painful injuries and the strange adventures that shaped Steven and Alexander into the partnership they are today. Along the way, man and horse fell for one another, hook, line and sinker, making Race To My Dream a kind of love story, as well as a roller coaster ride of heart-stopping moments of sheer terror, tears of sadness and hilarious clownish antics.

The scarcest of the worlds deadliest drugs has just become easier to attain. Foreign distributors had taken over Michael Canons city dispensing their product in a way almost impossible to detect. Local and federal law enforcement agencies are seemingly powerless to make a dent in the flow. A Colombian cartel has sent its number one team of enforcers to guarantee its safe arrival. When Michaels family is brutally compromised, he must become judge and jury. A strange series of events would force him to have to make the ultimate decision . . . could he also become . . . the Executioner. With his hand picked team pitted against the assassins of another continent he must try and stop the Cartel in a unique and explosive way. Without any hope of outside help, it comes down to justifiable payback or total annihilation for him and his elite team. The question wasn't who else would die . . . it was when.

With more than one million people currently infected and half a million already dead, the U.S. ranks among the top ten most severe AIDS epidemics in the world. Americans should know more about the current state of the epidemic so they can protect themselves and demand that the government act responsibly to reduce the danger of HIV in this country. Hunter exposes the ways in which the U.S. shamefully resembles a developing country, and the many fronts on which the government has failed to control the spread of the disease. In this startling book, she also shows what we must do to change the future of AIDS.

Junebug Drug-Free World

Book Review A born-again's harrowing autobiography retraces his path from an emotionally impoverished childhood, through a successful criminal career and, finally, to the redemption of the confessional. Razo assures his reader that his story will be unembellished, with no false modesty or undue embarrassment, and after the first few pages, its clear he will keep his word. Razo begins his meditation with his earliest memories of growing up working-class in the dusty, sunny atmosphere of post-war San Diego.

Despite the city's burgeoning diversity and sense of opportunity, his veteran father's American Indian heritage runs the family into trouble and teaches Razo some early lessons on the harsh realities of American culture. Though his family does help keep him in school for a while, his mother and father are over-extended with Razo and his five sisters. Though the emotions run hot between his mother and father usually it seems between rage and a begrudging commitment there is little feeling left over for the children. Razo doesn't shirk from any topic and provides some unique insights into the awkward presexuality that develops between the members of such a large cloister of siblings, especially when there is only one male to go around. It's a brave choice and makes good on Razo's promise of full disclosure. Through the machinations of poverty, prison, drugs and kung fu, Razo eventually impresses a major player with his martial arts and so finds himself one of Hell's Angels and on his way toward an illicit seven-figure salary. These years aren't overworked with analysis, and even when some regret seeps in, it seems a bit half-hearted (he was having fun, after all). The ragged emotions of such a life, though familiar territory in fiction and nonfiction alike, are still made interesting by their sheer detail and a narrative voice that isn't polished enough to hide the author's hell-bent and engaging character. Razo's life is colorful to be sure, and he was even a successful off-roading champion for a spell, but the real interest is Razo's unlikely negotiations of the mortal pitfalls of the drug trade amid so many murdered and murderous friends. Skeptical readers will conclude the author was saved more by a plea deal than by holy intervention, but its Razos story and there is no doubting that he's told it as he lived it. A harrowing, willful account of a life led hard and fast. -Kirkus Discoveries Dream Detective Page Publishing, Incorporated

In this series of clinical vignettes, a board-certified psychiatrist and life fellow of the American Psychiatric Association illustrates the effectiveness of dream therapy in treating posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD). Posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) can be disabling and difficult to treat, often leading to depression, suicide, and homicide in extreme cases. In this clinical-based reference, acclaimed psychiatrist and neuroscience researcher, Bruce Dow, provides a step-by-step approach for implementing dream revision therapy—a treatment proven to eliminate nightmares, flashbacks, anxiety, and other debilitating effects of PTSD. Drawing from work with patients in both military and civilian settings, Dow shows how to utilize imagery rehearsal exercises to help mitigate the effects of the illness. The vast majority of the book's 11 chapters focus on clinical case studies of patients who have suffered under the effects of the disease—for example, a hotel employee who witnesses a gory suicide; a female police officer whose career-ending crash in her patrol car brings back traumatic memories from childhood; and Vietnam combat veterans with recurrent posttraumatic nightmares. Each vignette offers details of the dream revision method along with clinical tips for ensuring its success. The final chapter features descriptions of brain mechanisms of PTSD and dream revision.

Race to My Dream Rowman & Littlefield

Up until this spring, I have never flown back through time and space in some sort of dream machine to catch a glimpse of this woman. I am convinced that I did not know her in her lifetime, and our paths have never crossed. You see I am fairly certain this woman is dead, and I have been transported to the year 1983. My name is Abigail Morrison, when I tell my story to others many times their first reaction is to gasp, but mostly they want to know how I survived being possessed. My house was beginning to scare the hell out of me from all of the spirit activity, yet I cannot leave when I'm convinced my house won't let me. The words the stranger in the library blurted out to me were true, "Someone is trying to get your attention." She knowing something about my house is creepier than the spirit trying to attack me, and I wonder if the word is out in town that I'm onto something? The thought of my house having up to ten spirits caught me utterly off guard. Having the wind knocked out of me last night also caught me by complete surprise. I felt it enter, but I did not feel it leave. This scares the shit out of me. I can't get the gun out of my head, or maybe I should say the lack of gun. The digital clock above the bar read 7:00 p.m. I knew it was time for me, and the spirit posing to be me to leave the smoke filled tavern. It's hard to say how I feel about everything, my ribs ache and I find myself looking for an attorney. Never in a million years did I think this would happen to me. It was 2002 when I began to dream of the drug dealers wife found dead on the railroad tracks, except her dream told me something else. Although, Dream Detective is fiction it is based on true events and how I interpreted my dreams, premonitions, the paper trail, and the chatter from the town folk on what could have happened Memorial Weekend in 1983.

Jennifer's Dream Synopsis Bone agrees to probate the estate of Jennifer Winston, a young woman who once dreamed of becoming a writer. She is a single parent. Oddly, she's been making good money, apparently as an editor, but Bone can't find a single client. And, the money stops after she is killed. Her interviews with a local "meth" connection brought her threats. Neither Phillip Martin, her college professor, nor Jim Ashley, her college teammate, has any ideas about her "clients." Martin wrote a best seller, years before, that was made into a movie. Ashley has had a number of best sellers and also movie credits. Gossip suggests that Jennifer might have been closer to the men, both married, than either will admit. As Bone's search for the sources of her income intensifies, he ends up running for his life in the Mississippi swamps and almost ends up dead. He finds out that Ashley's was behind it all. About The Author Rogers was born and raised with the red clay of MS under his feet. In the Army, he worked in an intelligence gathering capacity in the Orient. After his discharge, he graduated as an electrical engineer from MS State and worked for an aerospace company in CA. Later, he graduated from USC law school with honors and opened his own practice. After passing the NY bar, he represented clients in NY. He earned an LLM degree from Tulane with an emphasis on real estate problems and represented the SBA and FDIC handling real estate legal conflicts, later taking on real estate "workouts" for private clients until he retired to write books about his experiences and his life. During book breaks, he handcrafts wooden bowls, plays tennis and mangles a guitar. He divides his time between CA and a house on the Leaf River.
