When Lightning Strikes Penguin

Ethan Thorn is a lot of things. The heroic type isn't one of them. A hacker with a tendency to self-isolate too much, Ethan is desperate for something different in life, something more exciting than the sleepy town of Orchard Side. Being "Struck" and waking up in a secret government facility in a New York skyscraper certainly wasn't what he had in mind. Against his will, he's now part of The Lightning Project, a government program to turn average teens into crime-fighting superheroes. As much as Ethan hates it, there's one thing he secretly loves about it: Adam, the project leader. He's a sweet, shy, boy-next-door type, certainly not someone Ethan should be interested in. Nonetheless, Ethan finds himself drawn to Adam. Faced with a devastating secret from The Lightning Project's past, Ethan comes up against the most difficult choice of his entire life. Does he take his place as a member of the team, accept his destiny as a superhero, and bury the part of him that questions authority at every turn? Or does he go back to the life he hated in Orchard Side?

ANGLICO: "Super Grunts" of 1st ANGLICO were deployed to all four tactical zones of Vietnam in small mobile fire control teams, providing support to U.S. Army and allied elements. This organization was the last tactical unit to stand down from the war and gained distinction as the only Marines in-country reporting directly to MACV. Working closely with Korean Marines, recounting several actions involving these legendary warriors from the Land of the Morning

Calm, this little known but highly effective unit had an impact on the war far greater than their small numbers. Field radio operators and naval gunfire spotters composed the tactical membership of this unit. Both professions were cross trained in each competence, and each in turn was further qualified as tactical air controllers. An airborne capable platoon was established, mandating many ANGLICOs attend jump school and undertake other specialty training in the event they are called on to enter combat by unconventional means. Not being able to predict who they may be called on to support, training was pushed to the level of the most elite forces in the free world. BLUE DRAGONS: Most men of the Blue Dragon Brigade came of age during a war that raged fierce on their own homeland little more than a decade earlier. During a short lived occupation by North Korea, the people of the south endured extremely harsh treatment by would be conquerors. Events of recent history still burned in their hearts and haunted their dreams. They were mostly all children at the time leaving scarcely a man untouched by personal tragedy that could only be forged in a crucible of terror. Many were orphaned and all shared a thirst to settle a score that only those who drink deep from the same cup of dread can truly understand.

Loesser's book is a powerful, collective plaint-a bittersweet sequence of broken love and death songs for everyone who forgets the children, doesn't do the dishes, sleeps with the dog and wants to just once touch something electric before they die. The finality of these obituaries and letters carries with it a catholic understanding for an age unwilling or unable to stop glorifying heartbreaking death and violent love-our impossibly toxic contemporaneousness so thwarted and petty. This penetrating portrait of a disordered and dysfunctional era runs the gamut of loss and dejection-even the horses die without dignity. Terse, pithy language cinches Loesser's tightly wound, universal thread-news staying news indeed. These characters range from insurance executives reeking of cheap airport Bourbon to the sad, desperate children of misfit parents too lost in their own mundane mendacity to properly care for their spawn. They are drug-smuggling grave robbers and geriatric bank robbers, fallen Hollywood starlets and bronco riders and yet so familiar as to be disturbing to the very bone. Each page of this book is a haunting recognition and convincing reminder that if we're not already dead, we're dying.
