This intriguing book examines Lincoln's assassination from a behavioral and medical sciences perspective, providing new insights into everything from ballistics and forensics to the medical intervention to save his life, the autopsy results, his compromised embalming, and the final odyssey of his bodily remains. In this book, E. Lawrence Abel sheds much-needed light on the fascinating details surrounding the death of Abraham Lincoln, including John Wilkes Booth's illness that turned him into an assassin, the medical treatment the president is alleged to have received after he was shot, and the significance of his funeral for the American public. The author provides an in-depth analysis of the science behind the assassination, a discussion of the medical care Lincoln received at the time he was shot and the treatment he would have received if he were shot today, and the impact of his death on his contemporaries and the American public. The book examines Lincoln's fatalism and his unbridled ambition in terms of empirical psychological science rather than the fanciful psychoanalytical explanations that often characterize Lincoln psychohistories. The medical chapters challenge the long-standing description of Lincoln's last hours and examine the debate about whether Lincoln's doctors inadvertently doomed him.

Why would anyone want to create a zombie on purpose? Elwood and Elrond Snead are owners/operators of Snead Brother's Funeral Home. While attempting to invent a new kind of embalming fluid, they inadvertently invent a formula that has the power to resurrect the dead. After this discovery the brothers Snead decide to go into the business of resurrection. They're clients are literally dying to get in on the deal. But things begin to spiral out of everyone's control. The question being: What the heck are we going to do with all these insane zombies?
