Understanding Infants Psychoanalytically Laurel Leaf Humanism and Religion in Early Modern Spain brings together twenty-five essays by renowned historian Terence O'Reilly. The essays examine the interplay of religion and humanism in a series of writings composed in sixteenth-century Spain. It begins by presenting essential background: the coming together during the reign of the Emperor Charles V of Erasmian humanism and various movements of religious reform, some of them heterodox. It then moves on to the reign of Philip II, focusing on the mystical poetry and prose of St John of the Cross. It explores the influence on his writings of his humanist learning – classical, biblical and patristic. The third part of the book concerns a verse-epistle by John's contemporary, Francisco de Aldana. One chapter presents the text with a parallel version in English, whilst two others trace its debt to Florentine Neoplatonism, particularly the thought of Marsilio Ficino. The final part is devoted to the humanism of the poet and Scripture scholar Luis de León, and specifically to the confluence in his work of biblical and classical motifs. This book is essential reading for scholars and students of early modern Spanish history, as well those interested in literary studies and the history of religion. (CS 1102).

Sex, Love, and Therapy MDPI

Eugene is remembering the summer of 1938 in Frenchtown, a time when he began to wonder "what I was doing here on the planet Earth." Here in vibrant, exquisite detail are his lovely mother, his aunts and uncles, cousins and friends, and especially his beloved, enigmatic father. Here, too, is the world of a mill town: the boys swimming in a brook that is red or purple or green, depending on the dyes dumped that day by the comb shop; the visit of the ice man; and the boys' trips to the cemetery or the forbidden railroad tracks. And here also is a darker world—the mystery of a girl murdered years before. Robert Cormier's touching, funny, melancholy chronicle of a vanished world celebrates a son's connection to his father and human relationships that are timeless.

Humanism and Religion in Early Modern Spain Routledge Don't call up love before you are ready," says the Song of Solomon. Sounds fair enough, but in fact how do you get ready for love? In this book, we meet a man and a woman who are definitely NOT ready for a satisfying relationship—but then we go with them on a deeply moving journey as they encounter their "love obstacles" in a profound way. Readers can get ready for an answer to a burning question: can we do something to make love come into our lives? Letters to the author about Sex, Love, and Therapy: As a reader, I was there in the moment with the two characters. Their coming together was incredibly moving and emotional. The build-up of the intensity of the tension before that was thrilling. It was so important to me read a book where two characters grow into new and improved versions of themselves and can finally find meaning in their life. This book showed me how intimacy really works. Being quite young and yet having experienced love on my own, this is something that I will always remember. Reading "Sex, Love, and Therapy" gave me a better perspective on how I should carry myself and treat those around me. Thank you. For the man and the woman in this book, love never made sense before they were ready and found each other; then it became something truly magical. The negativity that was in their lives before quickly became something that seemed more insignificant. For once, they were both truly happy and content with their life and their future. They truly loved each other so sincerely; they loved the good and the bad about each other and accepted them for who they were, expecting nothing more in return. That's love and something I personally aspire to have in my life. As a young woman, I really enjoyed the part where Michelle was talking about how guys sometimes have sex "at you" instead of "with you." Fortunately, I've never had this experience, but I know many of my friends would relate to this. I really appreciated the rawness of this part of the book since it is a deep subject. There were so many psychological blocks in the characters that I recognized in myself and my friends. This book achieves multi-dimensional characters that we can empathize with, especially when they overcome the things that held them back. I highly recommend this story for the many lessons on love that are priceless. I've never read a book that surprised me as much this one. It started out with these two characters that I wasn't sure I liked at all. Then all of a sudden it took me into a whole thing about love that I realized I'd been waiting to read all of my life. It gave me goosebumps. This must be one of the most important books ever written about love and I'm a serious student of literature.

Development of Unconventional Reservoirs Routledge

Focussing on infants and the relationship between child and parent, this book presents a discourse on eminent Jungian child analyst Michael Fordham's model of development that extended

Jung's theory to infancy and childhood. In this book, Elizabeth Urban, a Jungian psychotherapist in weekly conversations with Fordham, proposes five key areas, such as identifying periods of primary self-function and the active participation of the infant in development, that contribute to the Fordham model of infant development. Drawing extensively on her observations and experiences working in a London child and adolescent unit, and a mother and baby unit, as well as using real-life observations to support the proposed contributions, the author provides a deeper understanding of infant development in the context of the relationship with the parents. This book is a unique contribution to the study of child development and is of great interest to paediatricians, psychotherapists, and other mental health professionals who work with children and their parents.

Developing Social Equity in Australian Adult Education Routledge Developing Social Equity in Australian Adult Education: Lessons from the Past presents a case study of the trajectory of an Australian adult basic education program in New South Wales from its humanist, social justice beginnings, through forty years of destabilising change. It identifies the influences and influencers that have directed this change; those that were responsible for the creation of the field in its foundation years, and that were displaced by other, more powerful actors representing the global influence of the neoliberal ideology. The story is told largely through archival evidence and the voices of those practitioners who helped shape the discourse and practice of the foundation years, and who were required to respond to constantly changing policies and socio-economic contexts. It discusses some lessons that might be learnt from the past in order that a new set of actors might be mobilised to promote an alternate discourse. This book will appeal to students and scholars of social justice and adult education, and practitioners involved in adult education.

The need for energy is increasing and but the production from conventional reservoirs is declining quickly. This requires an economically and technically feasible source of energy for the coming years. Among some alternative future energy solutions, the most reasonable source is from unconventional reservoirs. As the name "unconventional" implies, different and challenging approaches are required to characterize and develop these resources. This Special Issue covers some of the technical challenges for developing unconventional energy sources from shale gas/oil, tight gas sand, and coalbed methane.
